Maintenance Tip

Is your fuel stabilizer actually hurting your car?

Fuel stabilizers typically have bold claims printed on the label, designed to appeal to the type of person who cares more about protecting their engine than buying the right pet food. I know I am more particular about the fuel I feed my internal combustion companions than the food I feed my fluffy cat friends, but as this video explains, one group has a lot less side effects from corn content.

The ethanol in modern fuel is hygroscopic, meaning it attracts water. That H₂O content can reach a point where it will separate from the fuel, especially in long term storage. That water sitting at the bottom of the tank is the first thing to be picked up by the fuel pickup. To address this, the stabilizer concoctions work to lower fuel's ability to pick up that moisture. They might also add some type of alcohol so that the heavier mixture will burn—however poorly—when drawn into the fuel system and dispersed in the combustion chamber.

Yes, almost all of these mixtures help in some fashion, but a few caused damage in other ways compared to the test's control sample. A few of the products tested led to greater corrosion, due to a lack of additive preventing the growth of rust and allowing a greater ingress of moisture. That moisture will—at best—make for a hard starting car in the spring and a rusty mess of a fuel system if left alone too long. Our vintage cars often have steel fuel lines and tanks, so any moisture just sitting around is bound to cause trouble.

In the end, the best solution with a vintage engine is to start with non-ethanol fuel. Fuel blends contain a lot of additives already and, as pointed out in the video, if there was one miracle cure that could be added to fuel to prevent all such problems, it would likely already be in the gas from the pump. Ethanol is what causes most of the problems associated with long-term fuel storage in an old car or bike. Barring the option of getting pure gas (also known as recreation gas), K100 and STA-BIL came out on top as recommended from the products sampled.

Halderman Barn Museum Fund Raiser

The Mustang Club of Ohio wants to make other Mustang Clubs aware of the efforts to keep the Halderman Barn Museum open to the Mustang Community and various car clubs. As such, we are sending this information to other Mustang Clubs, and we ask that you pass this information along to your club members.

Ford Designer Gale Halderman created the design chosen for the original Ford Mustang, he guided the clay model team to the final full clay design and he oversaw the design elements of the original Ford Mustang to factory production. Gale retired from Ford after forty years, and he then converted the barn on his family farm in Tipp City, Ohio into the Halderman Barn Museum. Gale's personal files and records are on display in his museum in addition to items contributed by others. Gale opened the museum to the Mustang Community as well as other car clubs without charging an admission to see the museum. Gale financed the cost of operating the museum out of his own pocket. Unfortunately, we lost Gale on April 29, 2020. Gale's daughter, Karen Koenig, has the goal of keeping the Halderman Barn Museum open to the Mustang Community and car clubs without charging an admission fee. She hopes to be able to defer the cost of operating the Halderman Barn Museum by selling souvenir items and through contributions that are made to the museum. The Halderman Barn Museum currently has the following items for sell which will make great Christmas gifts for the home or garage:

- Halderman Museum Banners (36' x 12") in blue, Red and Black $20.00
- Mustang Concept Banner (36" x 12") in white $20.00
- Book "Mustang by Design" $40.00
- Halderman Museum hats in blue, green, red and black $25.00
- Mustang Concept photo $10.00
- Gale Halderman signature decals $ 5.00

Shipping costs are in addition to the above quoted prices.

100% of the proceeds from the sale of the above items will be used to defray the costs of keeping the Halderman Barn Museum open to Mustang Enthusiasts and car clubs.

Email Mitzi or Greg Smith at smithsstang@gmail.com to order. Payment accepted through Pay Pal, Zelle, cash or check. Orders paid by cash or check will be shipped once payment has been received and the check has cleared.
